Hi Everyone.

Most of you know that Lisa's boys, Zachary and Aaron, have an almost telepathic musical simpatico. What you may not know, is that they have been singing together, in harmony, since they were very young. But what you really don't know, is that one of their childhood original songs was: "45 minutes 'til Shabbos is over—bop, du bop, du bop, bop bop bop." The countdown would continue until they finally, happily, reached "ONE more minute 'til Shabbos is over..." Lisa told me that once, on a Wednesday, when a small Aaron (yes, he was once small) was misbehaving, she threatened him that if he did not stop doing whatever he was doing, she would turn that day, Wednesday, into Shabbos. Aaron was duly horrified. "C-can you really DO that, Mommy?" Lisa still feels guilty about that one.

In liturgy and hymn, Shabbat is described in glowing terms: peaceful (as in "Shabbat Shalom"), other-worldly, fragrant, radiant, filled with delights, life-giving. But Shabbat can also be an oppressive, interminable set of restrictions, especially for children raised in Shabbat observant homes like Zachary and Aaron were. No TV, no computers, no driving anywhere, no video games. For 25 hours!

For us, and most liberal Jewish communities, Shabbat is when we come to shul, have services, sometimes a Kiddush, and then we go on with our day. All good, but something is missing, I think. We read about Shabbat in the siddur, we proclaim the holiness of Shabbat, but we don't really experience Shabbat. At least not the part of Shabbat where we rest, chill out, and commune with each other. Because we have nowhere else to be and nothing else to do.

The magic of Shabbat and the oppressiveness of Shabbat are really two sides of the same coin. Zach and Aaron may have chafed at the rules but it was precisely because of these rules that they learned to love chess, and Settlers of Catan, and countless other board games and, more importantly, to share the day with friends—friends that they were stuck with, week after week, friends that they played with long after they were sick of them, until they found new ways to enjoy them. Shabbat can and should be a day whose very rules and restrictions force us to be together, to be present. Nowhere else to be and nothing else to do.

But maybe not for 25 hours. Let's start with about 7 or 8 hours. How about on Shabbat, June 24th, with friends and family, children and seniors? A day without phones and computers and cars. But with great food and drink and a leisurely afternoon of bonding together through talking and walking and playing and studying, side by side. And when it's over, a Havdallah ceremony that actually means something—a ceremony that sends us back to our regular lives, wistful for the magic of restrictions.

Shabbat Shalom.
Rabbi Sruli

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

I cannot take credit for this story as it was first written by Tuvia Bolton.

On the morning after Napoleon had won one of his most important battles, he summoned the commanders of his various legions to a pompous ceremony in his war-room to reward their bravery in battle. The commander of the Bavarian troops stepped forward, fell to one knee before his king and declared: "I ask for autonomy for Bavaria!"

"So it shall be!" proclaimed the Emperor to the ministers and officials surrounding the scene. "Autonomy for Bavaria!"

The Slovakian general then stepped forward, fell to his knee and similarly declared, "Liberty for Slovakia!" "Liberty it shall be!" shouted Bonaparte.

And so it was with the Arabian and the Ukrainian generals. "By G-d, autonomy and statehood for Arabia, and for the Ukrainians!" Napoleon announced.

Finally, the chief of the Jewish legion stepped forward. "And what of you, my loyal friend?" Napoleon asked. "What reward do you ask for your bravery?"

"I would like a cup of hot coffee with milk and no sugar, two bagels with cream cheese, and some lox on the side."

Without hesitation, Napoleon sent one of his officers to bring the Jew's order, saluted all those present, and left the room. Meanwhile, the breakfast arrived, and the Jewish general washed his hands for bread, sat down, and began eating while the other generals gaped in amazement.

"You fool!" one of them blurted out. "Why did you make such a stupid request? You could have asked for a nation, riches and power! Why did you waste your wish on a couple of bagels?"

The Jew stopped eating for a moment, looked up at them with a smile and replied: "At least I got what I asked for."

As I was trying to decide what to write this month, I came across this story. It struck me that as we often want to strive for the stars, at times we must also understand what is realistic. By no means does this mean to stop reaching for your goals, just maybe take smaller steps until the goal is attainable. For instance, maybe you recently had knee surgery. Today, walk a bit...tomorrow walk a bit more...soon you will again be running. See you at the annual meeting on May 24.

!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!BOOK GROUP NEWS!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

A pair of members, Margaret Meyer and Sandy Traister, met on April 3 to discuss Chasing the Rabbit: A Dad's Life Raising a Son on the Spectrum by Derek Volk. Volk is brutally honest with his readers about the challenges of raising his son Dylan who has Asperger's Syndrome. Volk shares his inner thoughts and emotions as the family copes with the many difficulties that Dylan faces in forming friendships, navigating public school systems, and being a part of a family. On many of the experiences told by Derek Volk, Dylan shares his thinking on the situation; his is a different perspective, showing us a glimpse into his mind and reasoning. As educators, hearing the stories of Dylan progressing through the school system gave us pause to recall students we had with unique needs and wonder did we do all we could. The reader is brought up close and personal to the frustrations and the hard work that this family has had to deal with each day, first trying to find specialists to help Dylan deal with his Aspergers, once diagnosed, and to find a way to help Dylan. Questions arise as you read. Could the parents have done better? What would we have done? How are the siblings affected, and how would my kids have handled a sibling with a disability? Do we know family members or friends who have a child with autism? Are we judgmental or supportive? The Volk family struggles continue today. It is a fascinating read of a Maine family and worthy of further discussion at our next meeting in May.

Our next book is From Sand and Ash by Amy Harmon. We meet May 8th. Here is a book description from Goodreads:

"As children, Eva Rosselli and Angelo Bianco were raised like family but divided by circumstance and religion. As the years go by, the two find themselves falling in love. But the church calls to Angelo, and despite his feelings for her, he chooses the priesthood. Now more than a decade later, Angelo is a Catholic priest and Eva is a woman with nowhere to turn. With the Gestapo closing in, Angelo hides Eva within the walls of a convent, where Eva discovers she is just one of the many Jews being sheltered by the Catholic Church. But Eva can't quietly hide, waiting for deliverance, while Angelo risks everything to keep her safe. With the world at war and so many in need, Angelo and Eva face trial after trial, choice after agonizing choice, until fate and fortune finally collide, leaving them with the most difficult decision of all."

Take care! Happy Pesach! Heading to NY to be with kids!

Margaret

National Yiddish Book Center Tour Sunday, May 7, 8AM-8PM

(Meet at 8AM at Temple Shalom in Auburn, or 9AM at the JCA in Portland)

This is an amazing opportunity to see, hear and feel Jewish History—with an authentic Yiddish accent—at the most important and magnificent Yiddish cultural center in the world. Aaron Lansky, the man who saved a million Yiddish Books, created a modern shtetl in an apple orchard—the building alone is worth the trip—and our 90-minute tour will include expert explanation and discussion of exhibits ranging from a multi-media show of seminal Jewish-American moments from television and the movies, to fascinating portraits of Yiddish writers, to the last Yiddish linotype printer from the Yiddish Daily Forverts. There is also a spectacular display of photographs (on loan from St. Petersburg, Russia) taken by ethnographer S. Ansky, who is most famous for writing The Dybbuk. Add to that an interactive experience of how traditional Jewish customs are having a modern renaissance (for example, how is the mikvah being used now?) After the tour, there will be a full hour to explore the museum on your own. Don't miss the gift shop—filled with some of the most unusual Jewish treasures anywhere!

The bus ride will be fun too—with a before-you-get-there video introduction from the Book Center, a short Yiddish story with English translation, a Yiddish cursing contest, and an intimate Yiddish concert by Rabbi Sruli and Lisa. Lunch, when we arrive in Western Mass will be at the delicious Atkins Farm, a real treat.

$55 per person includes roundtrip comfortable chartered coach bus transportation, with Wifi and lavatory, museum entrance and tour. Sponsored by the JCA and Temple Shalom in Auburn
